A free-running bus service will be required under a major new $36 million government plan to overhaul the Bayswater to Flinders Street corridor on Melbourne's outer north-west fringe, under new draft plans released by public transport minister Terry Mulder on Wednesday. Bayswater, the outer western fringe of Melbourne, will be cut in two, with bus services that make all trips to the city, as well as one or two peak hour tram services, replacing the two-carriage bus and walking-only route. St Werburgh's will be the first stop for this bus, which will run from Bayswater to Flinders Street. Credit:Luis Enrique Ascui The new route, which will run from Bayswater to La Trobe University via Heidelberg and St Werburgh's and on to the CBD, will be the first bus service to reach the southern side of the city since the government cut the route
